

BY FRAUKE | DECEMBER 16, 2021 | CATEGORIES EVENT, PLEASURE, CULTURE | 0 COMMENTS

All eyes, each person sees differently; perceive differently and judge differently. So Heike and I are definitely looking through different glasses, at least professionally. We both start an experiment. A harmless experiment, but an interesting one. An experiment that has to do with culture: We always visit the same museum and the same theater production. But we hardly exchange ideas, write down our individual experiences separately and compare them here. How different can the stories be?

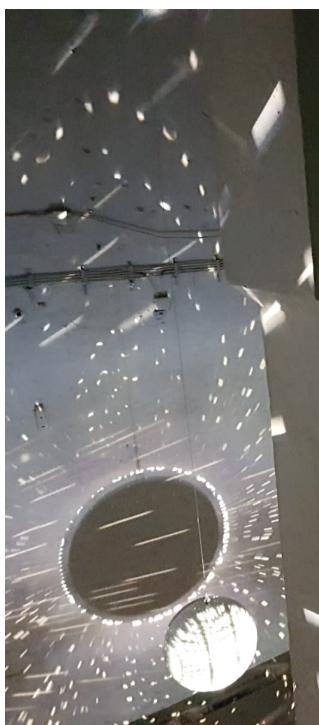

The center for international light art in Unna

Ray of light for Frauke

On a Sunday in Advent I was at the Center for International Light Art in Unna – one of the 21 RuhrArtMuseums; not alone because of the group tour, but without Heike. It was my second visit to the former Linden Brewery in two years. That's why I still had good memories of a few works from the collection, such as Mischa Kuball's "Space-Speech-Speed" (2001) or Keith Sonnier's "Tunnel of Tears" (2002). Since the permanent exhibition always keeps a few rooms under lock and key, I was able to enjoy Rebecca Horn's "Lotus Schatten" (2006) for the first time this year.

The tear tunnel - doesn't make you sad at all!

Frauke in Mischa Kuball's "Space-Speech-Speed" from 2001

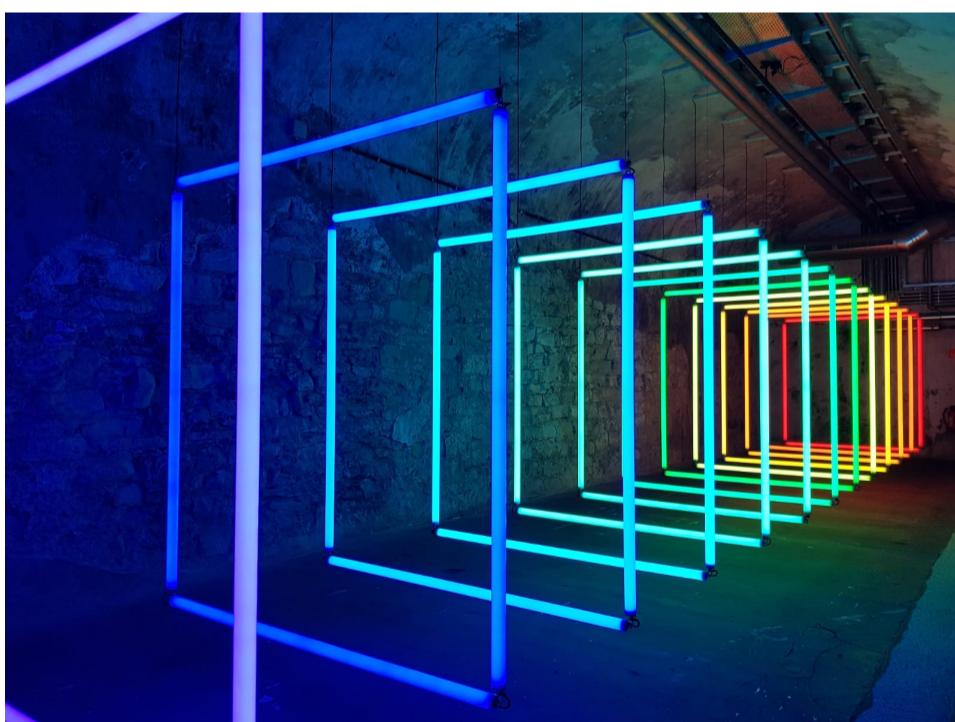

Raika Dittmann's "Chaordisch" casts a play of light on the cold cellar walls

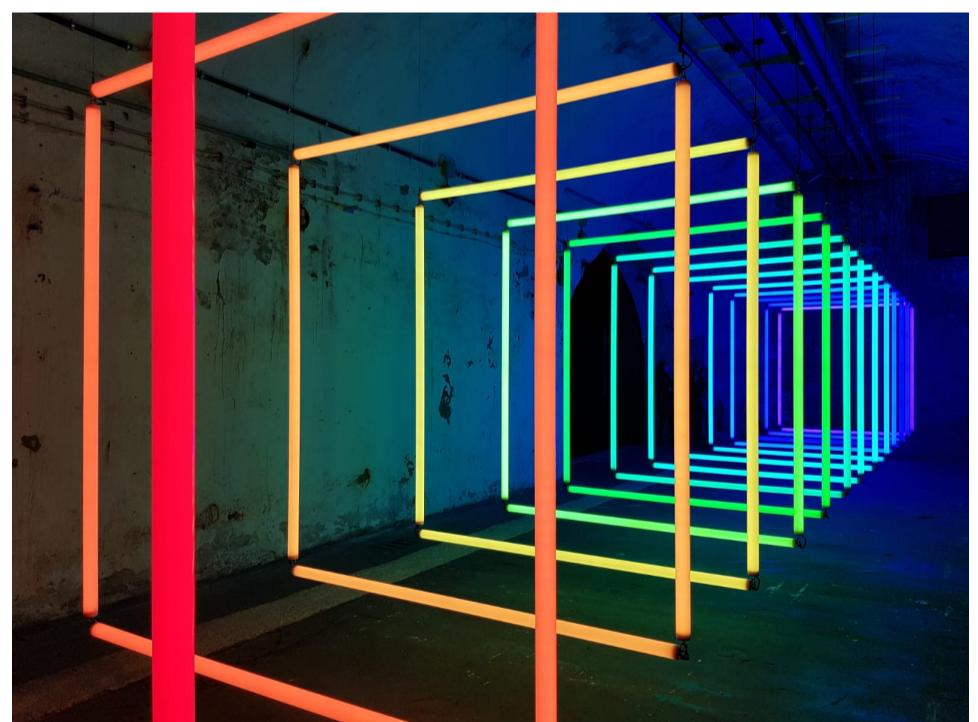

But I was absolutely thrilled by the inconspicuous, filigree and at the same time enchanting work by Raika Dittmann: CHAORDISCH is a comparatively young work from 2016 and is structured like a mobile. The translucent objects and copper wires cast shadows on the wall using spot-ons. The images are reminiscent of kaleidoscope-like raindrops.

Frauke's fascination with light

The current special exhibition "Fascination Light" celebrates the 20th anniversary of the world's first and so far only museum for light art. It comprises three works - so to speak, "small but nice". Well, the individual works weren't all that small! "Spectrum (Frame Version)", a rainbow tunnel made up of supposedly 20 rectangularly arranged neon tubes (I counted 14), inspires right at the beginning. The frames are lined up one behind the other at constant intervals. They float in space and you can step through the color spectra ("Don't jump over them," says the group leader and art historian). If you stand in the middle in front of the LED lights, the central perspective takes hold and the vanishing point pulls you into the colorful grid. If you look from the side, the structure is reminiscent of the rainbow spiral,

Every single side of the color spectrum looks different

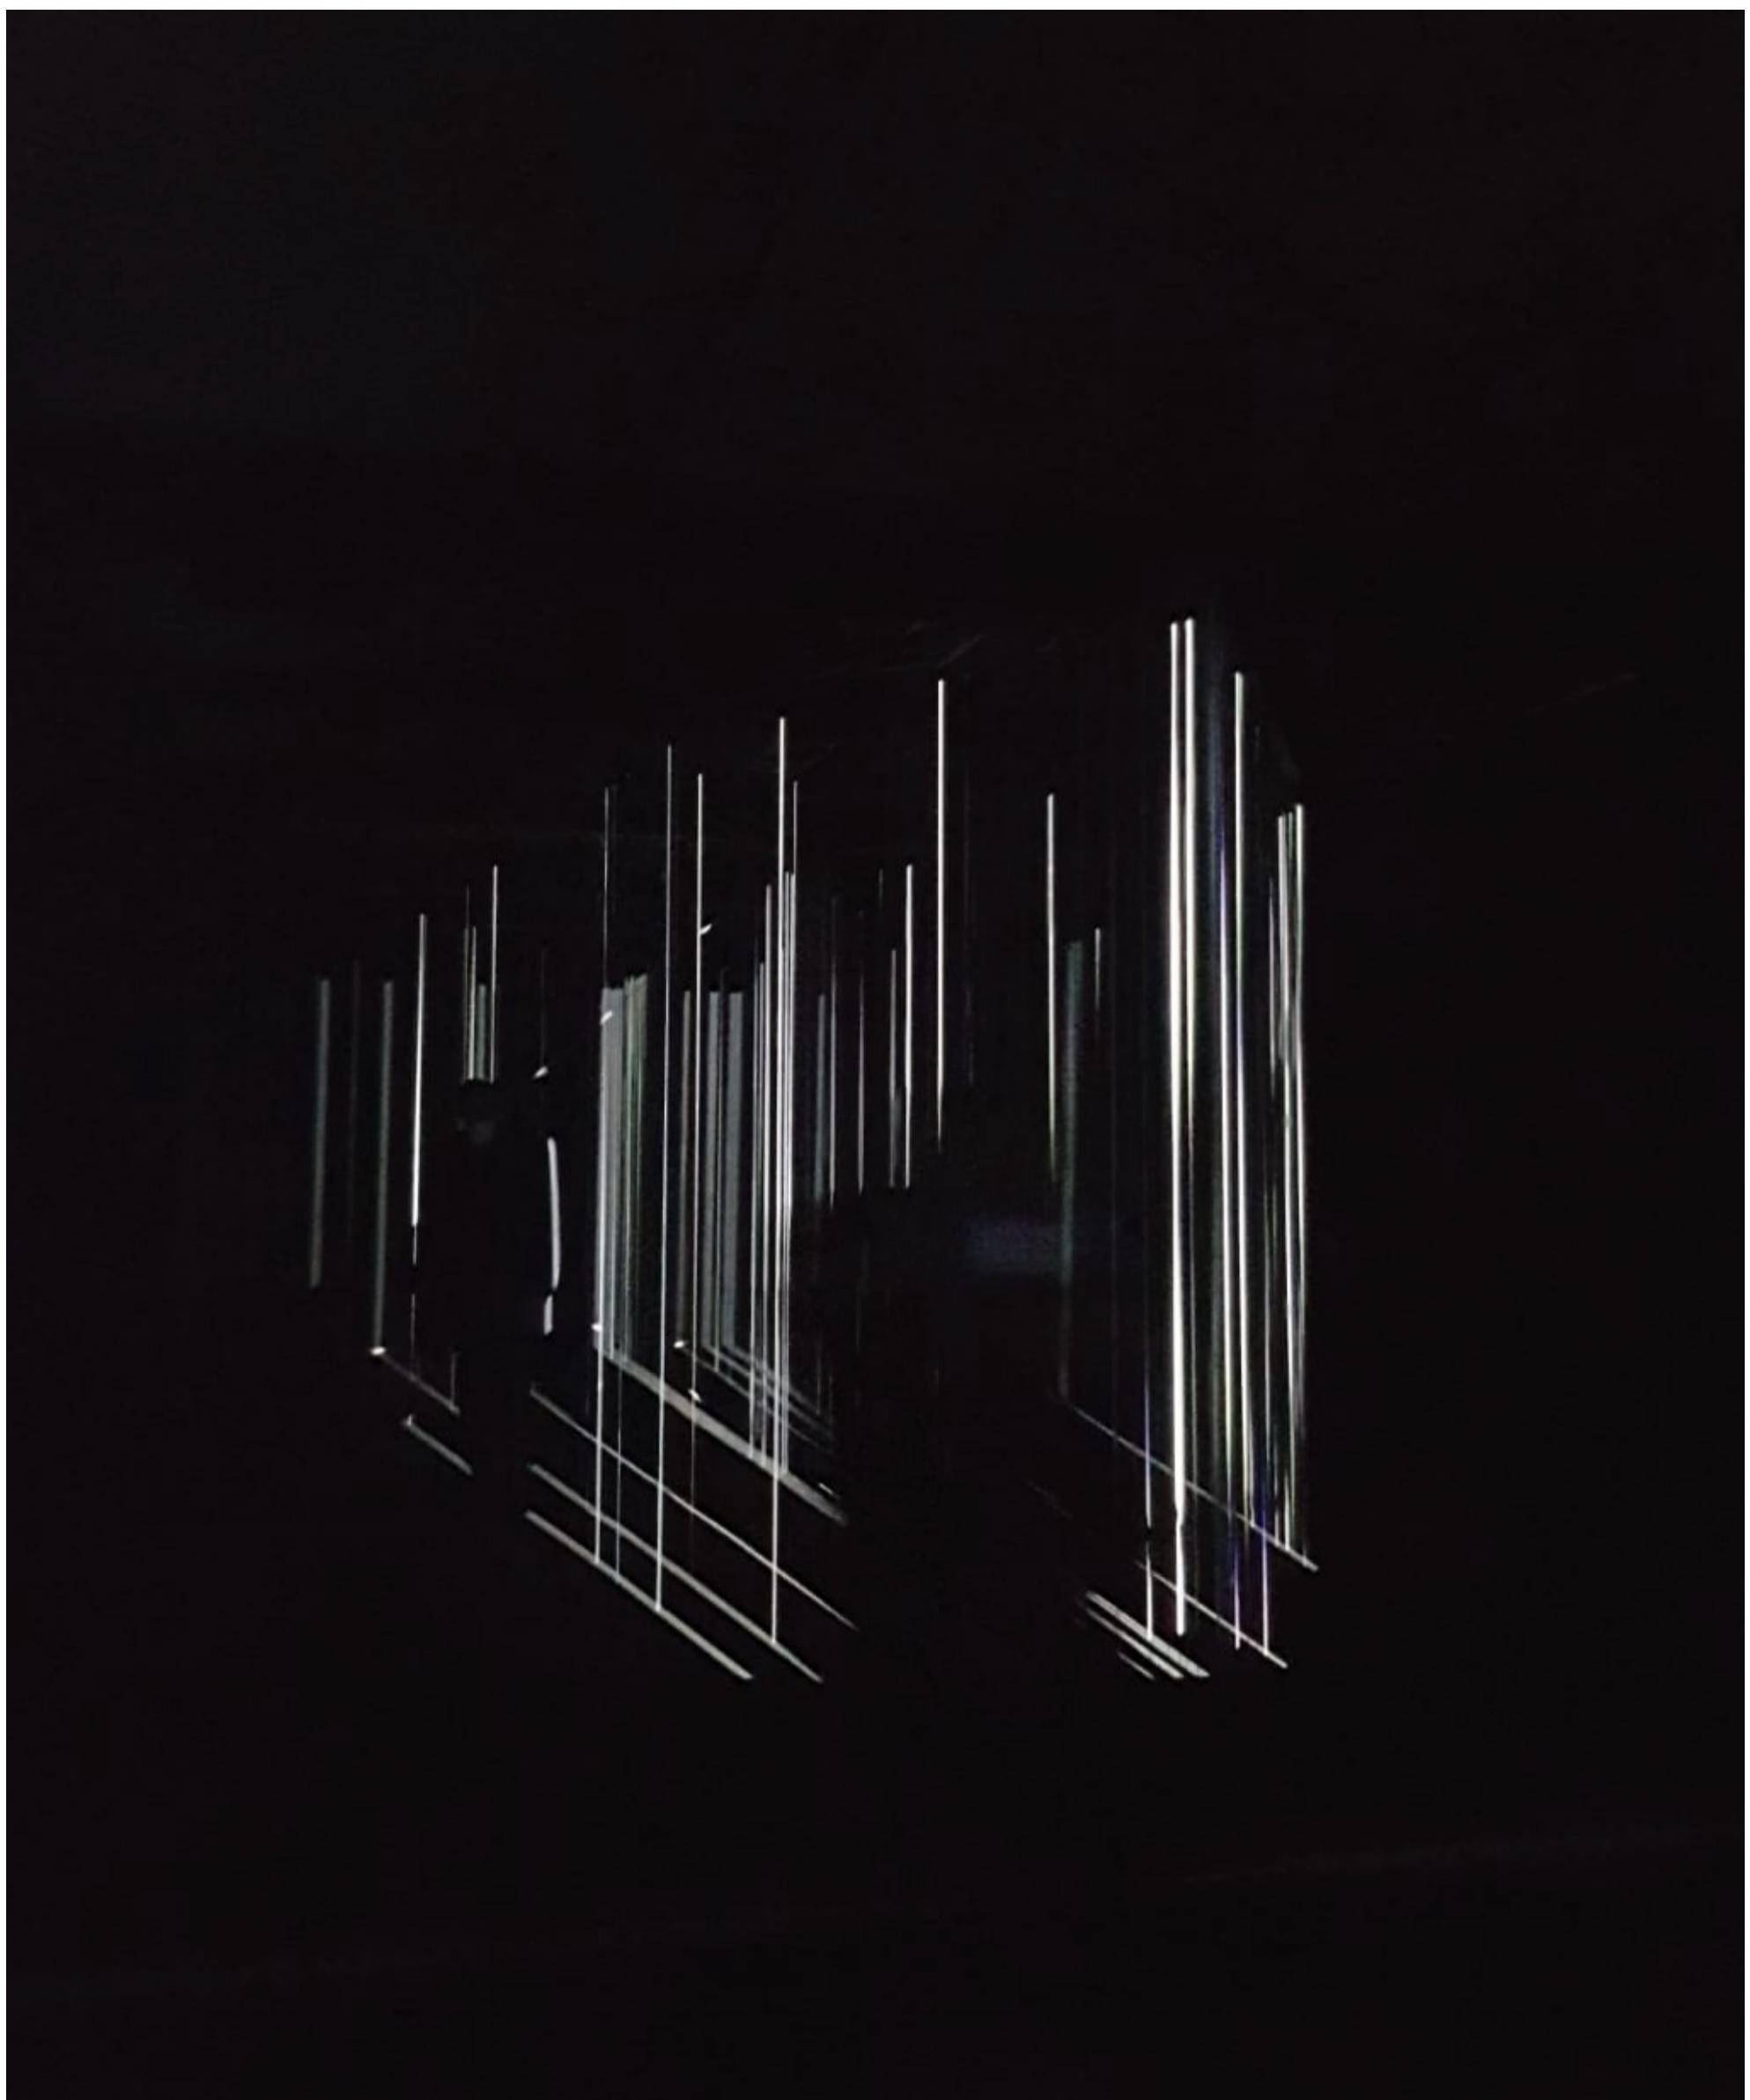

From the side, the frame version looks like a rainbow spiral

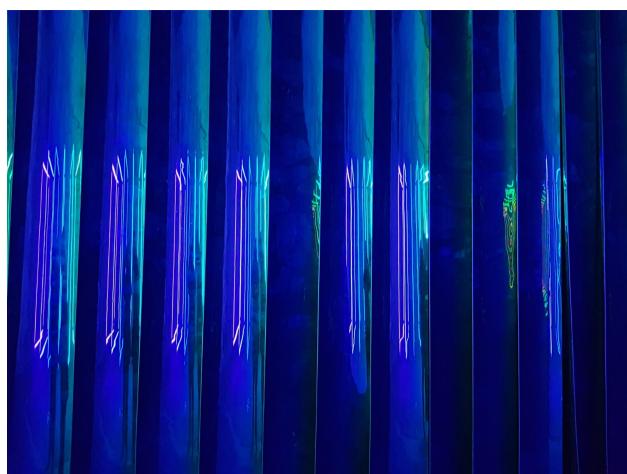

"Spectrum" is a prime example of the central perspective and even walkable

In the space between the cellar vaults you enter a dark room par excellence! At one end of it is a room installation "Plane Scape" by the artists Wolfgang Bittner, Lyndsey Housden, Yoko Seyama and Jereon Uyttendaele. The group work is immersive (a popular word in current art discourse: can be experienced with all the senses): Thin, vertically arranged rubber bands span a labyrinth full of holes that can hardly be seen in the dark. The accompanying six-channel sound composition allows minimal light sources to wander through the installation. Associations with flocks of birds, monsoons and the matrix are released. If you take off your shoes, you can even enter the construct. I carefully groped my way through the verticals. I lost a bit of the feeling for above and below because of the flashing dots of light.

"I have to go through the monsoon" on sound and light games // Matrix reloaded

In the last room, the artist Adela Andea has attached a filigree installation to the walls of the Lindenbrauerei with absolute precision. Thin, colored neon tubes meander across the wall, crossing each other and seeming to float in the corners. Including colorful bodies made of foam rings. Up close you can discover all sorts of details and different materials. From afar, "Chaos Incarnate" looks like a huge, colorful thundercloud.

Not a work of art - but: A great photo

There's a lot to discover in Chaos Incarnate

The colorful storm cloud

Frauke's Light Experience

All works are real eye-catchers and look almost even better on the photos than in real life. No wonder so many come here with cameras. Unfortunately, it seemed to our guide that there was little interest in information - I was missing a bit of art-historical references here and there. But maybe that's not really necessary with light art, and of course you could always ask. The house also expressly recommends the photo tours in order to try out different settings with plenty of time. Maybe next time?

Details as far as the eye can see

"Hippieh - ya - hey" - Heike in a frenzy of colour

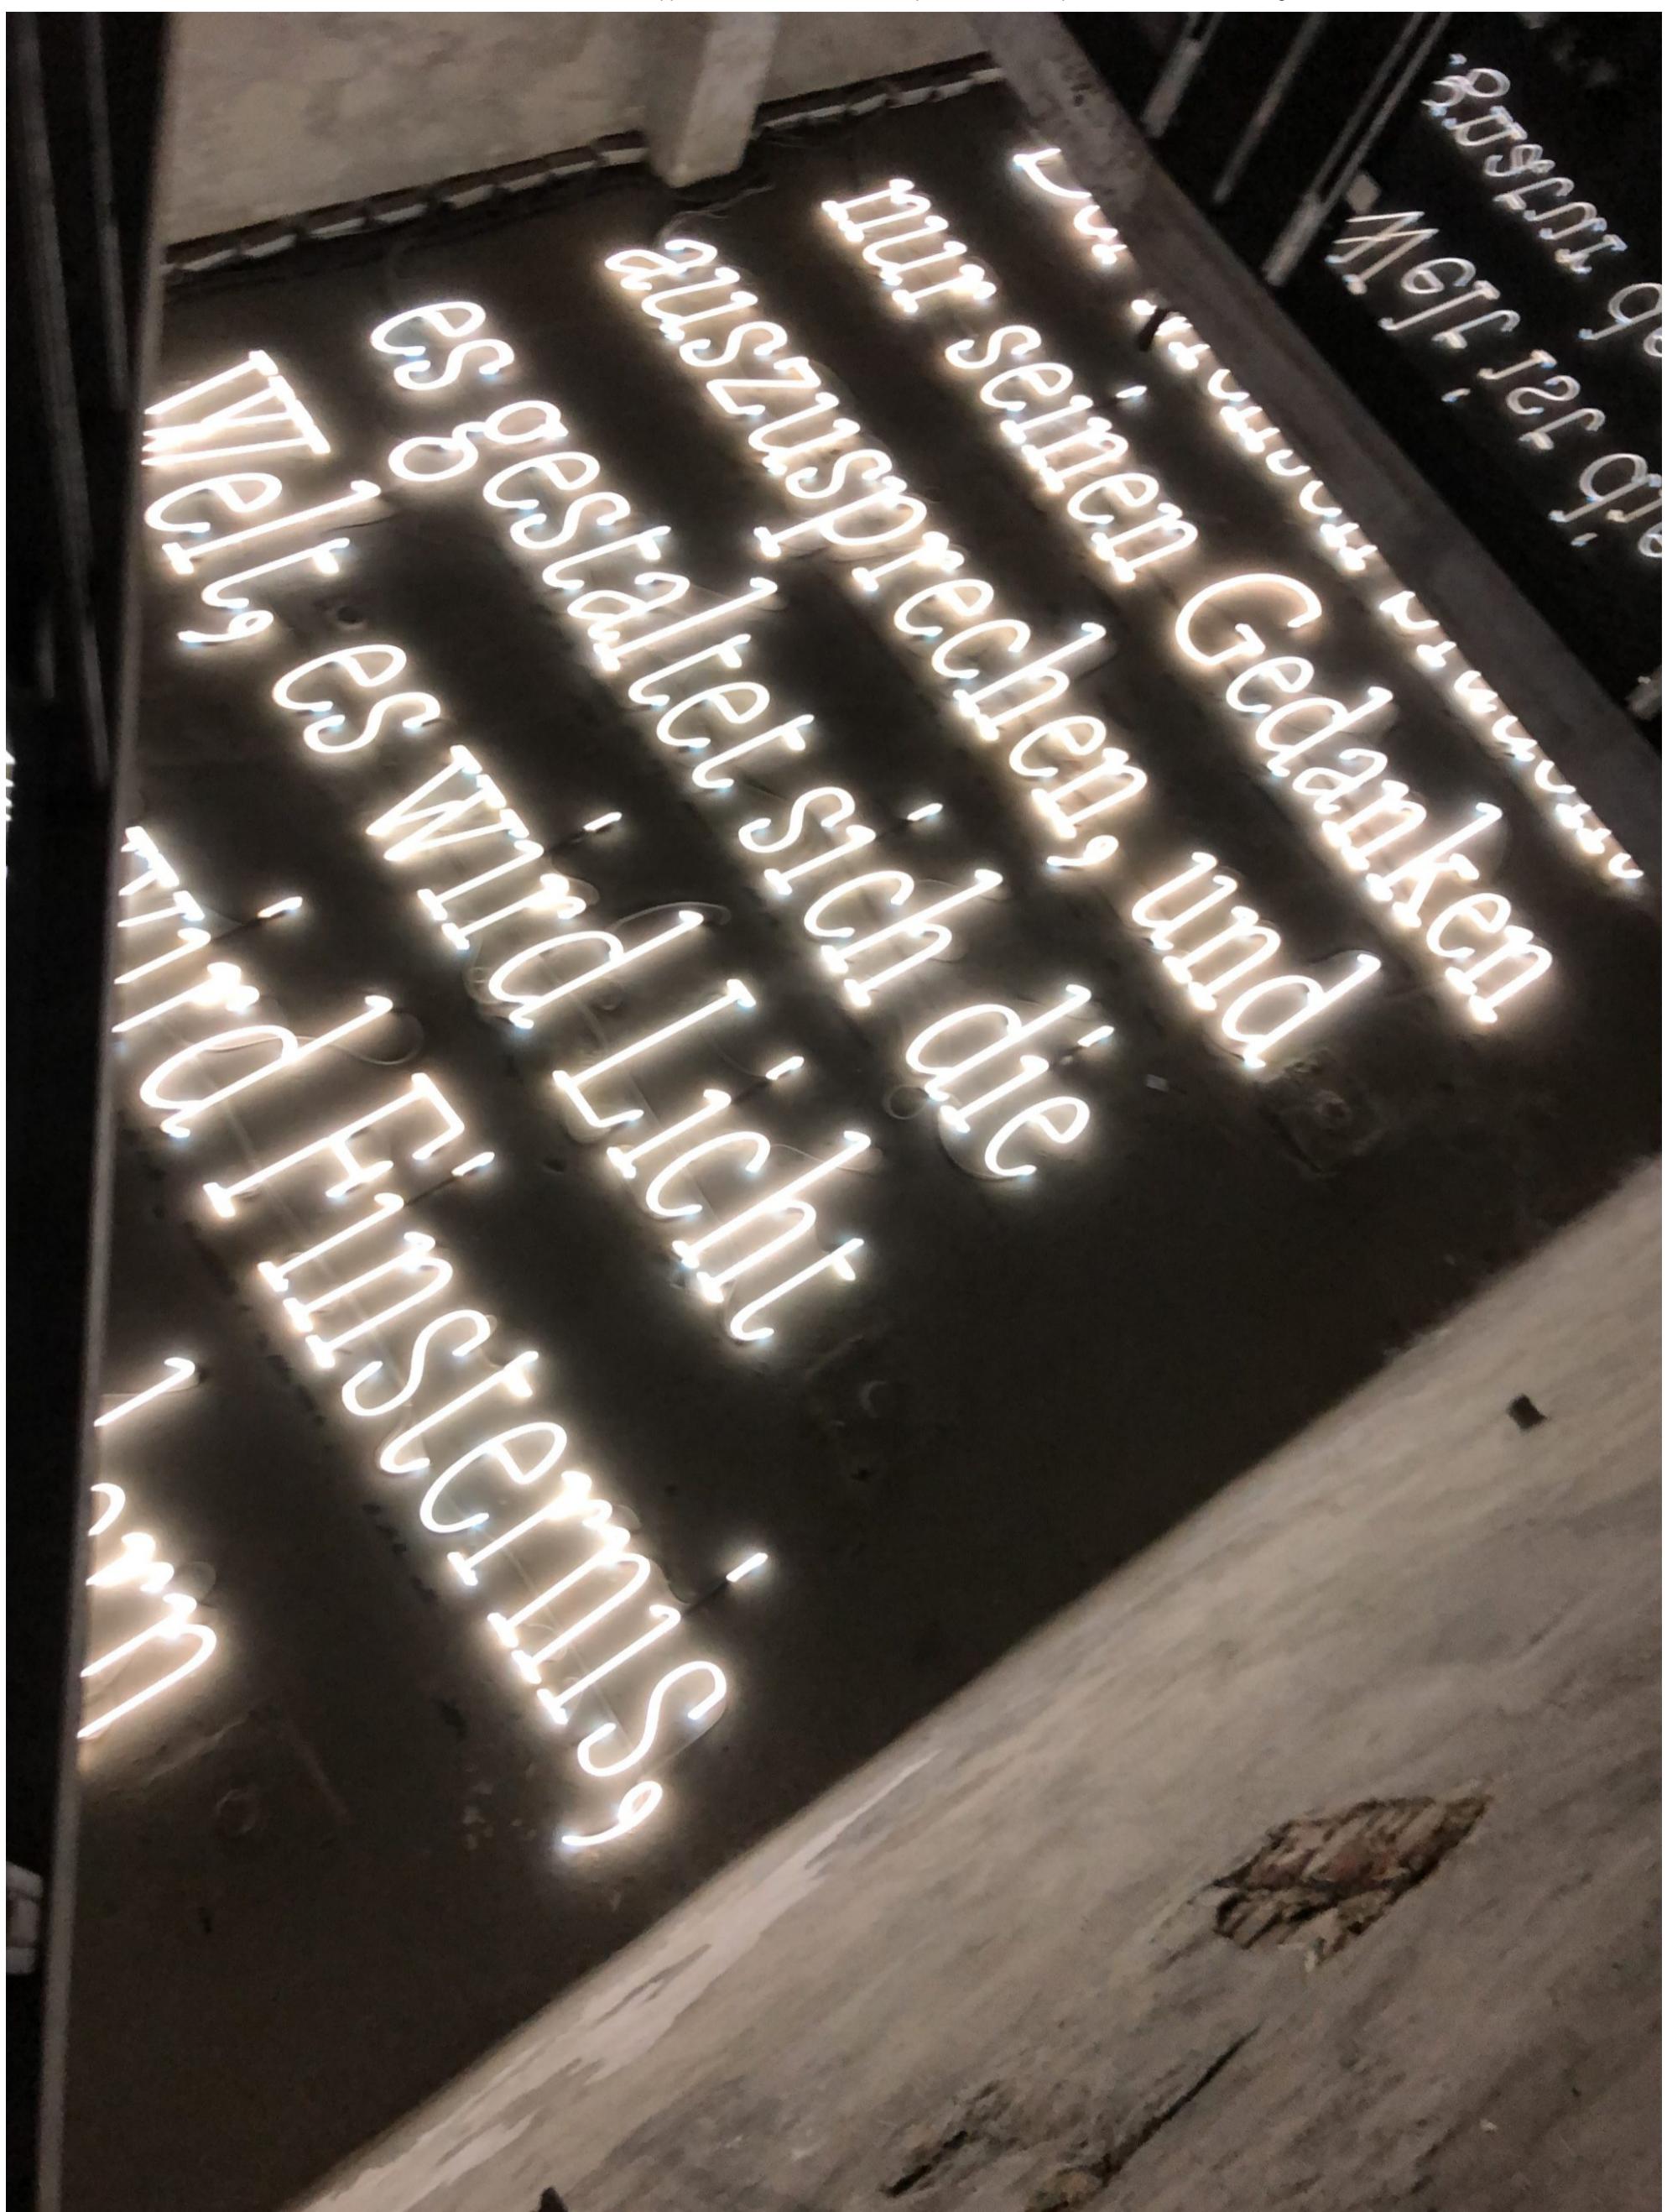

The Center for International Light Art in Unna has been around for 20 years, and that's roughly how long it's been since I was there for the first and last time (at least it was during ExtraShift). Reason enough, then, to set foot over the basement threshold again. Especially since the current temporary exhibition, which is being shown on the occasion of the anniversary, promises a real rush of colour. And since I'm a big fan of light installations and light art anyway, a week later I embark on my journey to Unna as Frauke.

In the basement I enter the kingdom of darkness of light

Small but mighty

As part of a - fortunately - small group tour, I first go through parts of the permanent exhibition (that's worth it, too), for example about the installation by Joseph Kosuth, a representative of conceptual art from the 70s, which addresses a poem by Heinrich Heine that is written on the floor of a room is "installed". We walk across it in a zigzag bridge and only ever see excerpts. Since the museum is located in the basement of the former Linden brewery, the high basement rooms do the rest for the effect of the art installations.

Joseph Kosuth's conceptual art in the form of a poem

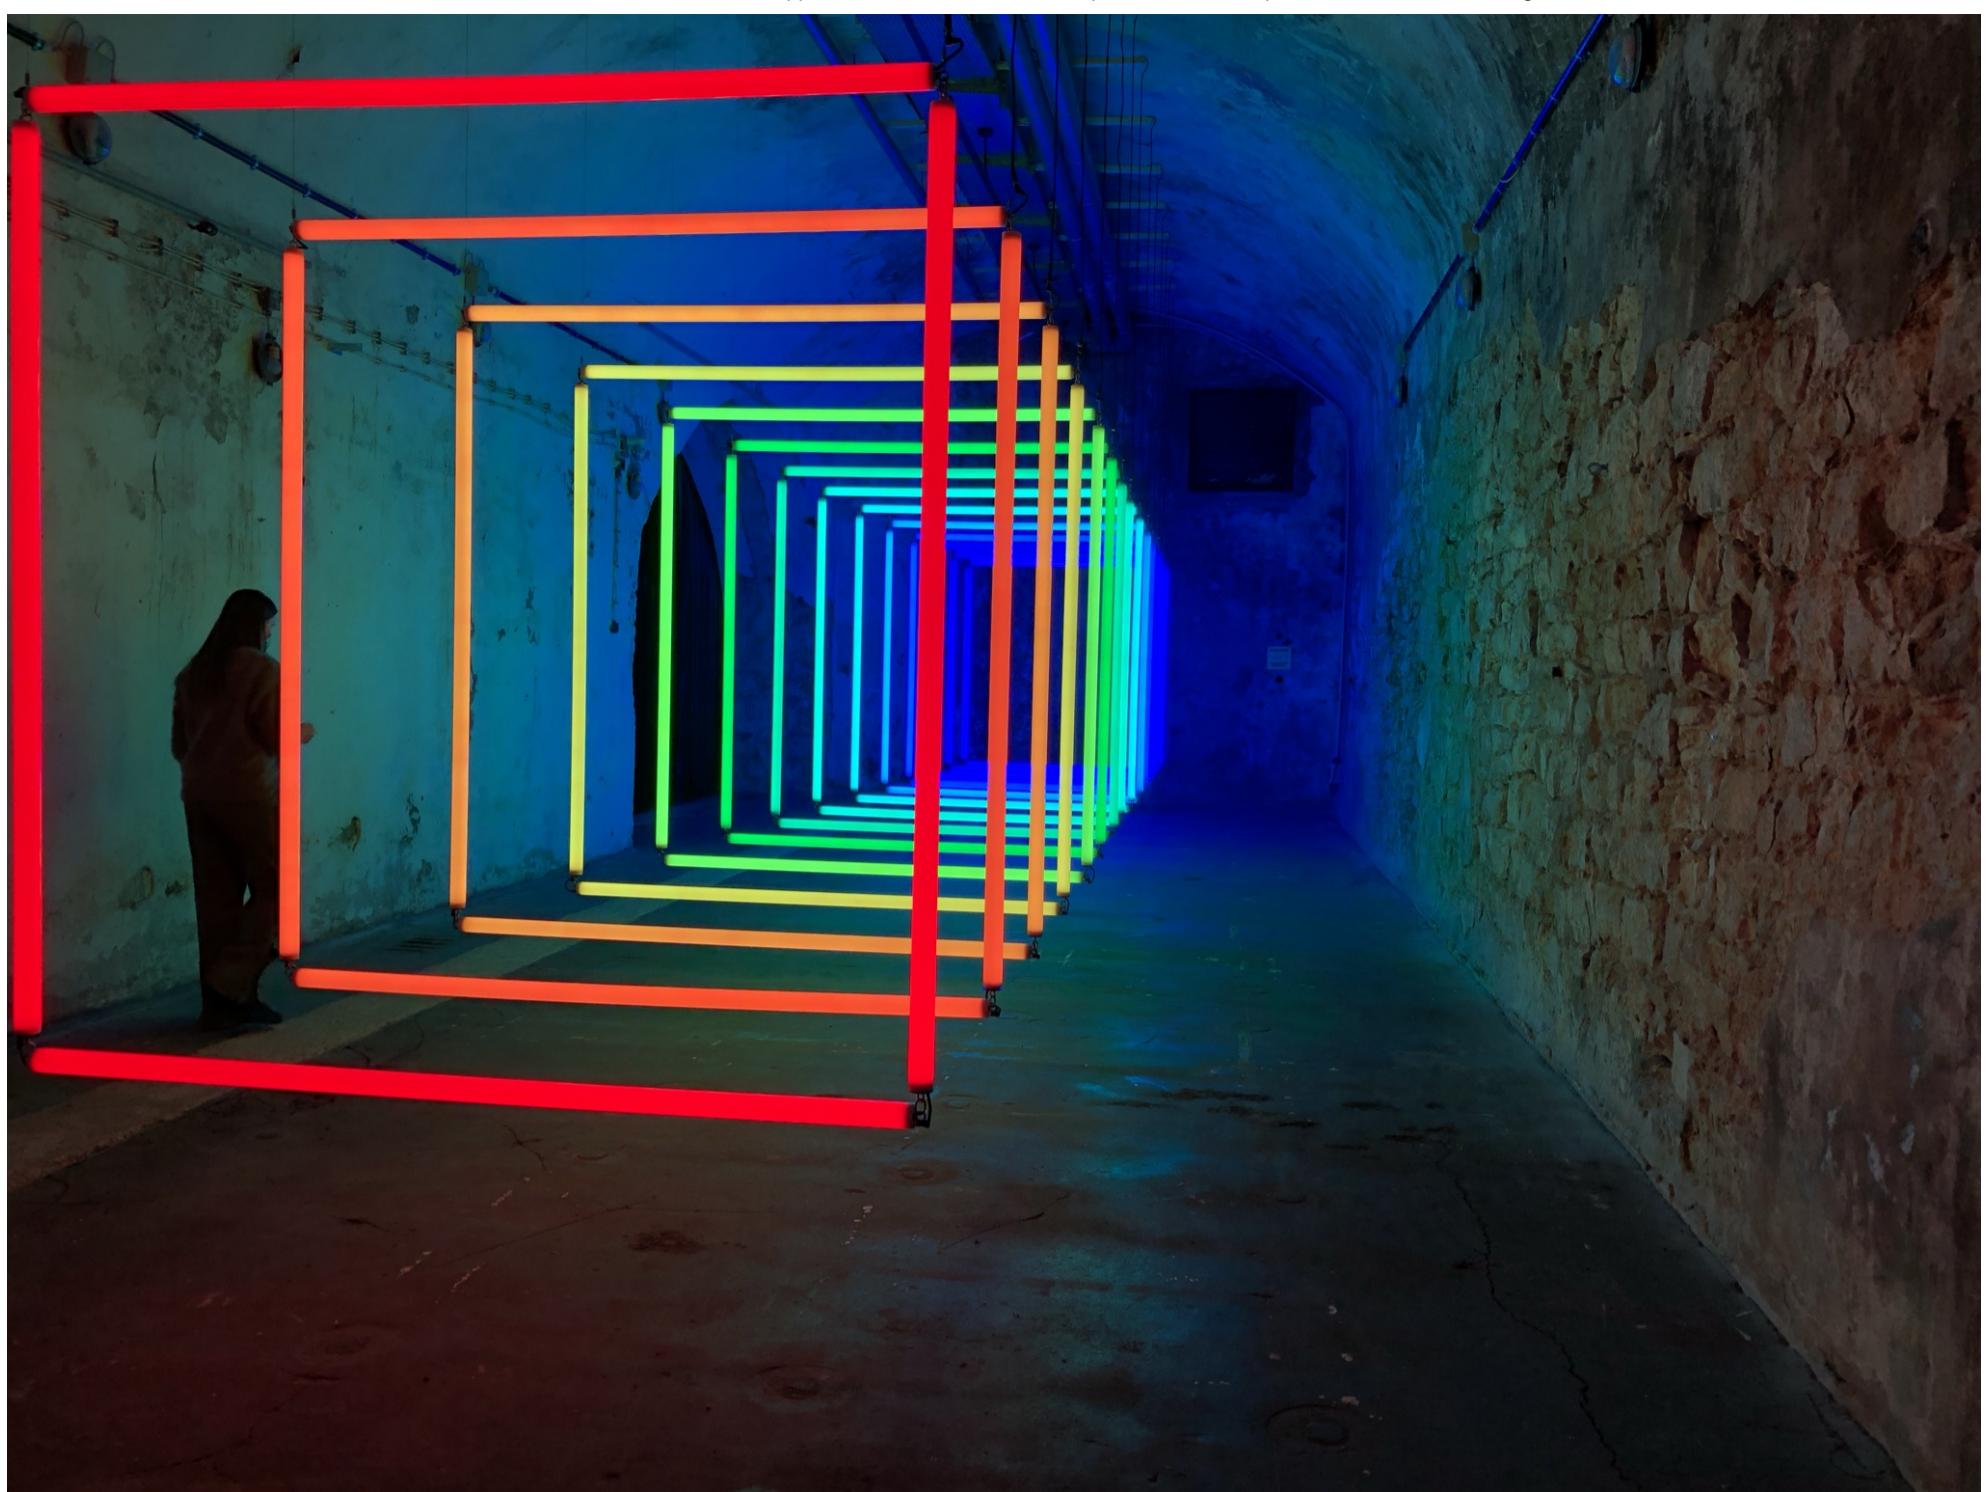

Heike's fascination with light

Our art mediator then leads us quickly to the temporary exhibition rooms, where we have enough time to marvel (and take pictures)! The first room with the installation Spectrum (Frame Version) by Olivier Ratsi immediately captivates me. I feel a little like I did in art class when we practiced drawing perspective with a vanishing point ;-). The 20 (it should be) LED frames hung in a row suggest a depth in the room and the color changes create a special vibration. A nice 70s feeling arises - intoxication without addictive substances so to speak.

Hypnotic Tunnel Vision reloaded

Different from every angle, but always very beautiful!

Vertical elastic twist in the dark

In the second room we find a walkable forest made of thousands of white rubber bands. The image of a moving, abstract landscape is projected onto this. I enter the installation without shoes and feel like I am in a maze. But you don't have to go inside to experience Plane Scape. The almost 40-minute sequence of images can also be experienced from the outside! Nevertheless, I recommend the step-in experience, because the experience is always special!

Darling Chaos

Already peeked around the corner into the next room

However, my personal “flasher” is the third room in the “Fascination with Light” exhibition. I immediately feel “at home” here, because the installation is called “Chaos Incarnate” – color, light, material – everything is arranged in a crazy and chaotic way on the walls, ceiling and floor, almost like a “wall sponge” only of course not so unappealing. The installation by the Texan light artist Adela Andea is also somewhat reminiscent of underwater worlds and coral reefs. The materials are a “colorful” mix of electronic components, fluorescent tubes, plastic - is it pool noodles that have been sliced open? – kind of insane, but mainly very psychedelic and absolutely cool!

In the absolute frenzy of colour

And immediately collected ideas to imitate

Just mega colorful & totally beautiful

Heike's radiant experience

The temporary exhibition alone is worth a visit to the Unna Center for International Light Art! But the permanent exhibition also gives a lot of mega impressions - and you will also get really good background information on the 90-minute tour - thanks at this point to our dedicated mediator! Time flies and a new visit will certainly not take place again in 20 years!

The lotus effect – a couple of couches here to chill out and the wellness oasis would be perfect!

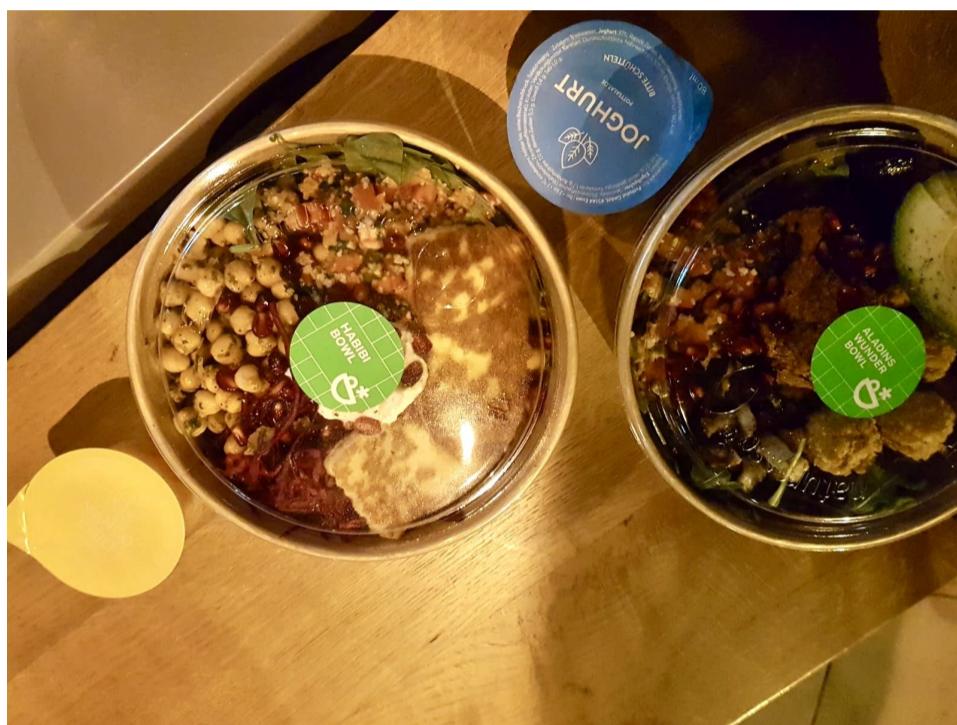

Mystical truths are revealed here

Hippie groove on a yesterday date

Flower-Power-Love & Peace Atmosphere not only in Unna, but also in Essen's Aalto Theater, whose organic architecture I really like! It's groovy here. Because this is where Frauke and I have our "Yesterdate" in the musical revue of the same name by Heribert Feckler and Marie-Helen Joël. The music of the Swinging Sixties is revived in the two and a half hour piece. I'm a huge fan of the Austin Powers films and grew up listening to my parents' Beatles records - so I get a little twinkle in my eye at anything from that era! But we take it easy and start with pot salad around the corner with a "light" bowl (one is actually enough for 2 people). Pottsalat's Potties didn't actually design their store for on-site consumption,

Since we have the mess!

Delicious, healthy and pretty to look at – the pot salad bowls

Strengthened, you can go to the next pleasure point

"Very psychedelic" at the Aalto Theater in Essen - Heike's perspective

Delicious - so fortified we enter the Aalto-Theater, one of eleven Ruhr stages, and get involved on a "Yesterdate". The story revolves around the last concert of the Beatles on their Bravo Blitz tour in Essen and the band that a few Beatles fans founded back then and whose revival performance is now pending. Very nice: the five former band members meet in an apartment furnished in the style of the 1960s to plan their performance. There is a lot of singing and reminiscing about that time. Some members of the band have such powerful voices that I can immediately feel the vibes of the 60s. And the background stories about the individuals make us puzzle, smile and laugh.

The Aalto Theater in Essen (c) Frank Vinken

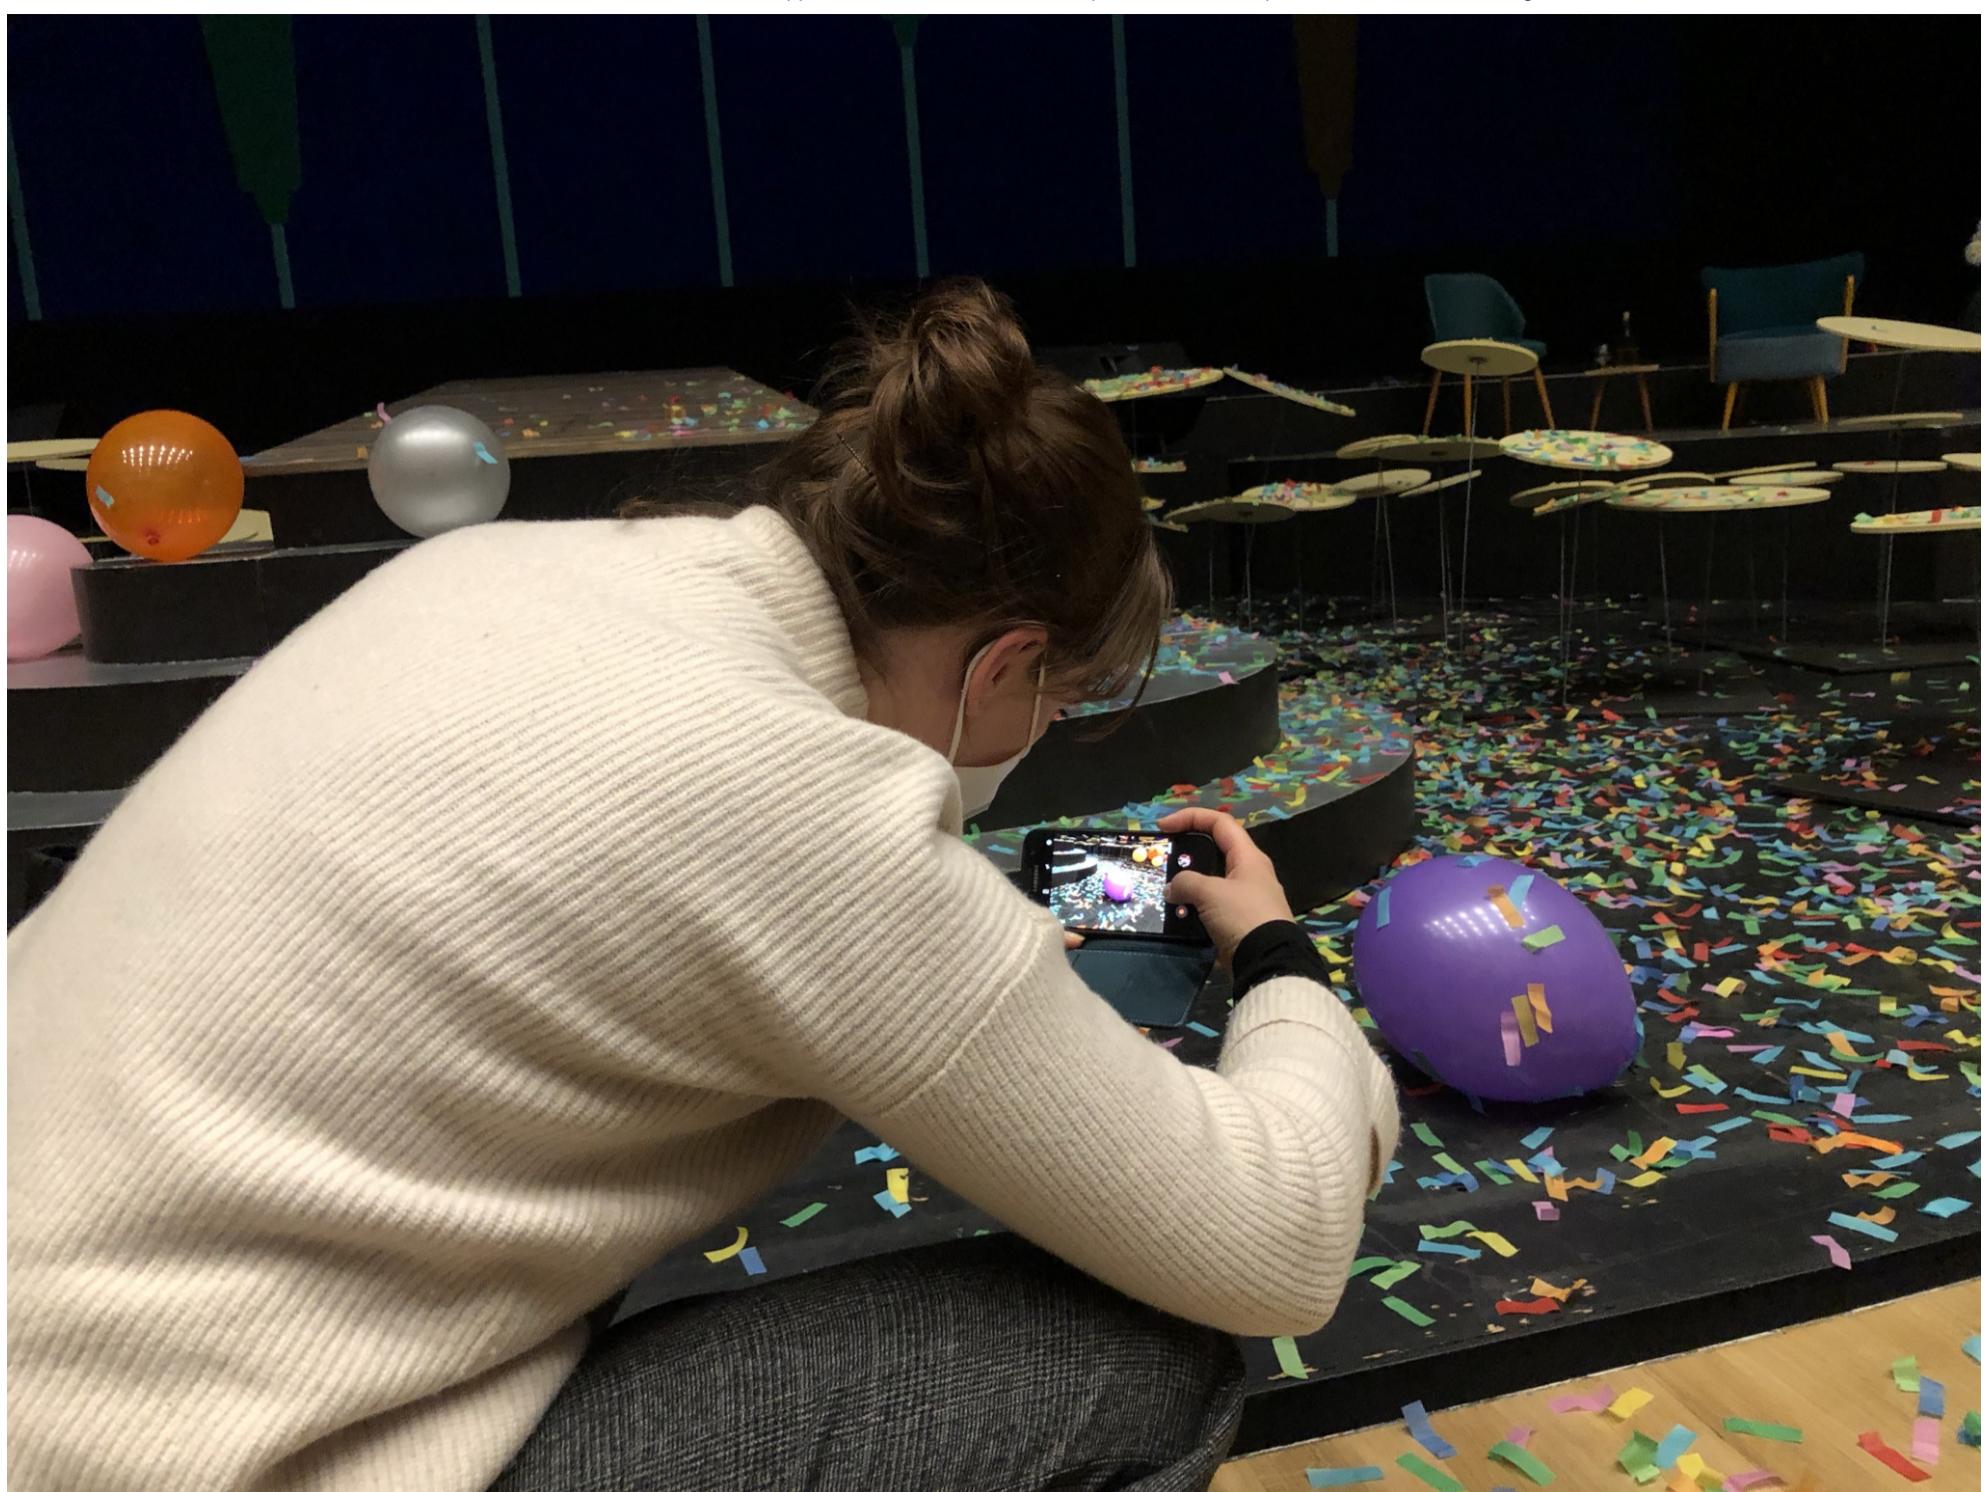

A Yester "Date" at the Aalto Theater

We're already groovy excited

Sing along welcome!

I can sing along to the songs across the board and I think it's great - although the piece is definitely a mixture of musical and operetta for me and I don't really like it that much. But here the songs are just so wonderful and the story so entertaining that I like to get involved! Even if I initially thought that the Aalto Theater and the play didn't go together, this changed over the course of the performance, because the organic design language of the building and the hippie-like feeling of the play simply "matched" very well!

Rain is just confetti from the sky

Heike likes

I don't want to anticipate too much of the plot, but: As a viewer, I sing along and feel very comfortable, even if the story could have offered one or the other "resolution" or more details in my opinion. All in all, it was a very well-rounded evening, so an absolute recommendation for all people with a connection to the 60s and 70s!

Colorful would have gone just as well!

The Aalto Theater foyer is modern and clean, yet cozy

Frauke's outfit also supports the black and white contrast

Flower Power Frauke

Finally more theater again! Simply an event in itself to be in the Aalto building in Essen. White predominates inside and out - a stark contrast to the night sky as well as the German fashion preference for black. The stage area also forms a contrast; here a blue à la Yves Klein predominates. As Heike explains to me on our seats, the architect is also known for a certain design of flower vases. He has remained true to this form in the rank balconies. Flower power is also the order of the day on stage:

Flashback to the hippie era

The play is introduced with projected black-and-white photographs (somehow this is currently popular in the theater world): hippies with guitars in a meadow, protest marches against nuclear weapons, signs against the Vietnam War. All slides that the protagonists look at together at Bärbel and Lutz. Their apartment furnishings may have stuck in the 1960s, but in life they have set themselves up in the middle-class senior physician style. Kenneth also inherited well - he can't really part with the luxury of a London shop. The friends who, among other things, witnessed Woodstock in 1969 reminisce.

The old '68ers are planning their revival!

The Yellow Submarine today as a Bulli

St. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band incarnate

Their VW bus was called Yellow Submarine, the band "Dropping Soft Ice" (right, not dripping; whether it was a joke or a lack of English is not explained). When planning a gig in the '90s, they sing songs from their youth. The lyrics fit well into the dialogue. But when Gunda shows up with her son Alexander, a secret that has been kept for years comes to light...

Wish fulfillment just before Christmas

The music is great! I'm amazed at how many songs I know. Someone in the audience is always singing along, and that's totally okay. When Brigitte Oelke starts singing "Son of a Preacher Man", she has the full attention of the room - vocally just great!

Brigitte Oelke alias Gunda

The self-assessment of the others is healthy: "Treat yourself to a drink during the break. Because the more they drink, the better we sound!" No sooner said than done; over a glass of wine I say to Heike: "Live music would be nice!"

Frauke's second act

My wish has never been fulfilled so quickly: In the second part, a band is on stage. The benefit concert is obviously taking place. Song follows song, the fashion of the time is shown in all its colourful, absurd and beautiful facets. The highlight - but unfortunately also the only resumption of the storyline - is Thomas Hohler's and Henrik Wager's "Father and Son". The two convince both vocally and acting. The end of the party is announced with confetti and balloons.

The break well used!

The party is over - it was nice!

Don't lose the groove - Frauke's conclusion

The piece is a musical journey into the 60s and is just plain fun! The audience got infected. For most of them, the songs probably awaken their own memories. For me (with my tender 30 years) rather less. But I love this time - especially political! Unfortunately I missed that a bit; the rebellion against the parent generation, the student movements, the Cold War and the emergence of conservatism. The time came alive on stage mainly through music, design and fashion. But very skillfully! Since Friday I've had songs from the 60s playing at home. Unfortunately not on vinyl, but on the mobile phone ... with Bluetooth box ... via Spotify. Welcome back to the 20s - the second millennium. 😊

Photo credits:

Photo: Keith Sonnier, Tears of Tunnel, 2002 © artist/Center for International Light Art/ RTG

Photo: Mischa Kuball, Space – Speech – Speed, 2001 © artist/Center for International Light Art/ RTG

Photo: Raika Dittmann, Chaordisch, 2016 © artist /Center for International Light Art/ RTG

Photo: Olivier Ratsi, Spectrum (Frame Version) © Artists/Center for International Light Art/ RTG

Photo: Adela Andea, Chaos Incarnate, 2021 © Artists/Center for International Light Art/ RTG

Photo: Group work (See text), Plane Scape, 2012/21 © Artist/Center for International Light Art/RTG

Photo: Joseph Kosuth, The Signature of the Word, 2001 © Artist/Center for International Light Art/RTG

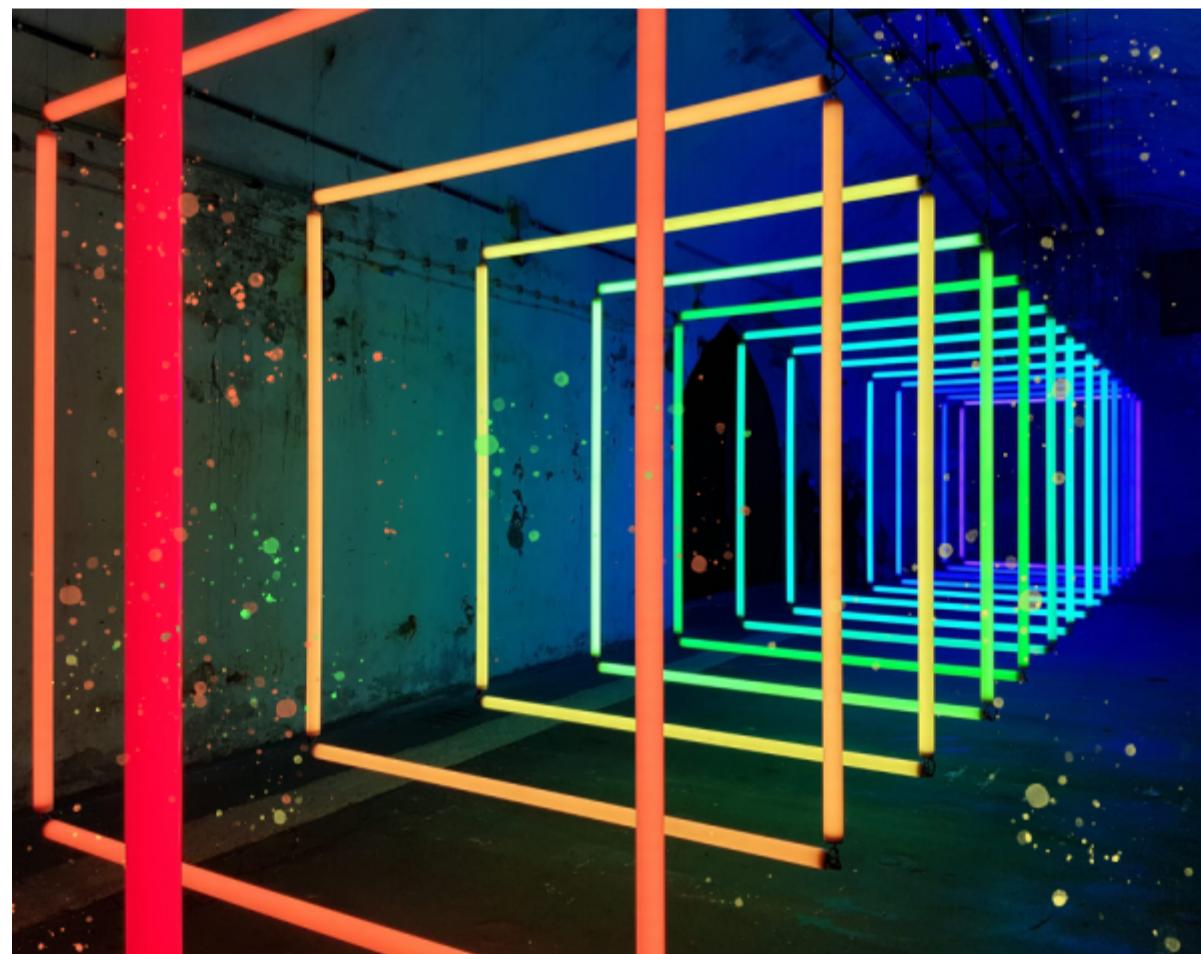

Photo: Rebecca Horn, Lotus Shadow, 2006 © Artist/Center for International Light Art/RTG

Photo: Bruce Nauman, The True Artist Helps The World (c) Artist/Center for International Light Art/RTG

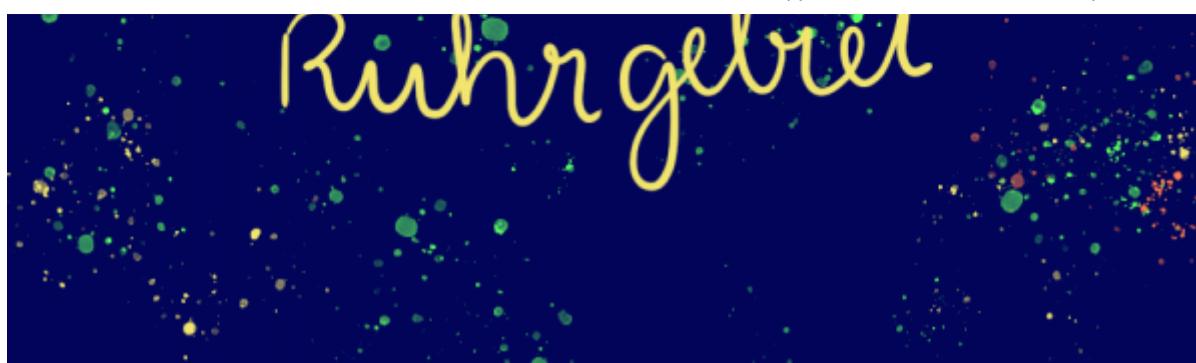

All Yesterdate production images © Matthias Jung

TAGS: AALTO THEATER , ESSEN , UNNA DISTRICT , CULTURE , LIGHT ART , RUHR STAGES , RUHR ART MUSEUMS , THEATER , UNNA

A cultural experiment with a “change of perspective”

Lichtkunst mit
Hippie-Groove
im Ruhrgebiet

SHARE THIS POST

ALL INFORMATION AT A GLANCE

CULTURAL CHANGE OF PERSPECTIVE

Center for International Light Art
Lindenplatz 7.1
59423 Unna

Aalto Theater Essen
Opernplatz 10
45128 Essen

Pot salad
(pick up and/or have it delivered)
Bismarckstraße 5
45128 Essen

ABOUT FRAUKE

My name is Frauke, I grew up in Bavaria and lived in the capital of Germany for a while. My master's degree brought me to Düsseldorf - the Ruhr area has been "holidays around the corner" ever since! Here I find the alternative flair from Berlin, the green from home and above all a lot of culture! As an art historian, I love visiting museums and sculpture parks, but I also like to relax in a hip café, browse at flea markets or stroll through trendy districts. Evenings are usually filled with theatre, poetry slams or open mic events - and of course a good beer should not be missing. I find all of this in the Ruhr area with its rough charm! At Ruhr Tourismus I work in online marketing for the #RuhrBühnen and #RuhrKunstMuseums;

MORE ARTICLES BY FRAUKE

Culture \(free\) day in Oberhausen and Bochum - A trip from paradise to hell

Two days of Ruhrtriennale – personal stories, good food and lots of culture

Art bike tour from Unna to Dortmund

Full boom of culture - a cult day after lockdown

Show all items by Frauke

PREVIOUS ARTICLE

NEXT ARTICLE

write a comment

Your email address will not be published. Required fields are marked with * .

comment

Name *

Email *

site

Save my name, email and website in this browser for the next time I comment.

Mich per E-Mail benachrichtigen, wenn jemand auf meinen Kommentar antwortet.

Kommentar abschicken

DAS KÖNNTE DICH AUCH INTERESSIEREN

Von Ruhr zur Ruhr – Meine Tour durch das südliche RadrevierWie ich das Radfahren auf dem \(halben\) RuhrtaRadweg wiederentdeckteAlles leuchtet so schön bunt – Meine 3 Tipps für Recklinghausen leuchtetWandern im grünen Süden – von Hattingen nach Bochum

FOLGE UNS IN DEN SOZIALEN NETZWERKEN

DIE #MEINRUHRGEBIET VIDEO-SAMMLUNG

#MeinRuhrgebiet - Thomas zeigt Euch seine Lieblingsorte im Pott#MeinRuhrgebiet - Katrin & Nina zeigen Euch ihre Lieblingsorte im Pott#MeinRuhrgebiet - Helmchen zeigt Euch seine Lieblingsorte im Pott

THEMEN

- Erlebnis
- Industriekultur
- Genuss
- Event
- Rad
- Kultur

KONTAKT

Ruhr Tourismus GmbH
Centroallee 261 46047
Oberhausen
E-Mail: info(at)ruhr-tourismus.de

IMPRINT DATA PROTECTION

imprint
privacy

Shopping

Telefon Hotline: 01806 181620

(€ 0,20/pro Anruf aus dem deutschen Festnetz;

Mobilfunkpreise max. € 0,60/pro Anruf)

